Asks Program Now To Prevent Intergroup Crisis

A human-relations agency charged that "criminal neglect" in city planning was causing "serious intergroup tensions and dangerous race-relations problems." The 53-year-old American Jewish Committee termed the condition a "crisis," attributing it to an "obsolescence of public and private facilities — schools, hospitals, housing, and transportation," reports the New York Times. As a result, the agency charged, "vast sections of our major cities have become wastelands."

These findings were embodied in a special report by Philip E. Hoffman, chairman of the agency's domestic affairs committee. It was presented at the annual meeting of the A. J. C.'s national executive board at the Shoreham Hotel, in Washington. The report was based on an investigation in the last two years by agency specialists in human relations.

"Excessive obsolescence of urban facilities, coupled with the major population migration to the cities, is seriously aggravating intergroup tensions by throwing the burden of these deteriorated conditions on low-income, non-white groups," the report said.

Within ten years, it predicted, three-quarters of the population will be living in metropolitan areas. Pointing to shifting populations in large cities, the report cited these figures:

"Non-whites in New York are 13 per cent of the population, as compared with 6 per cent in 1940; non-whites represent 20 per cent of the population in Chicago, as contrasted with 8 per cent in 1940; 14 per cent in Los Angeles, contrasted to 6.5 in 1940."

The report cited studies predicting that, by 1970 Chicago would be one-third non-white and Manhattan in New York forty-five per cent, says the New York Times. To cope with this "stage of frantic transition," the report recommended the "creation of an extensive human-relations program geared toward building bridges of understanding among the various groups in the cities' populations."

Mr. Hoffman urged an immediate conference of mayors of large cities to deal with the "crisis." He appealed for Federal aid to cities, since "these problems should be regarded as a matter of prime national concern."

Noted Rabbi Urges Soviet To Allow U. S. Group Visit

The American Jewish Congress disputed recent assertions by S. B. Nikitin, vice-president of Intourist, the Soviet government's official travel agency, that it was easier for American tourists to get a visa for the Soviet Union than for Russians to visit the United States.

Ira Gulden, chairman of the A. J. C.'s Commission on International Affairs, said in a statement that the Soviet embassy at Washington had refused every visa request last summer when the visa applicant designated himself as a rabbi, says the New York Herald Tribune. He said that of eleven rabbis who requested Russian visas, eight were flatly refused. Of the other three, two were originally rejected by the Washington embassy, he said, but obtained visas through Soviet embassies abroad.

The only rabbi who got a visa in Washington, Mr. Gulden added, listed himself as "clergyman." Another rabbi got in last year, he said, by describing himself as a "lecturer."

Mr. Gulden suggested the anti-rabbinical attitude might be in reprisal for critical articles by rabbis who visited Russia in 1957. He pointed out that Methodist ministers had no trouble in getting visas last summer.

Dr. Israel Goldstein, of New York, noted Rabbi and Zionist leader, said the Soviet regime had repeatedly given the impression that it would like to see its Jewish minority of 3,000,000 persons "assimilated out of existence." Dr. Goldstein gave examples from eyewitness reports illustrating the "malaise" among many Jews in Russia who feel they are not trusted by the regime and are barred from sensitive areas.

The old Nazi term of "Judenrein," he said, can be applied in Russia, where Jews are barred from military schools and training schools for the diplomatic service, says the New York Times. Even though Prime Minister Nikita S. Khrushchev acknowledged recently that Jewish scientists have played a major part in Russia's space program, Dr. Goldstein said there were almost no Jews among the younger crop of scientists.

He added that "recent reports of arson and vandalism against a synagogue in one of the Russian towns, together with reports of anti-Jewish manifestations in other places in Russia, convey the impression that there is a considerable hang-over of anti-Semitism among the populace."

He urged the Soviet regime to allow a delegation of American Jewish leaders to visit Russia and evaluate the existence of anti-religious and other pressures against the Jews.

Bnai Brith Budget Over $6 Million Is For Youth Work; Adult Education; Effort For Soviet Jews

Bnai Brith, the 116-year-old Jewish service organization, voted a budget of $6,389,034 for next year. The sum included a record-breaking amount of $2,920,000 for the expansion of youth activities. The budget was voted by Bnai Brith's board of governors at their annual meeting at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, in New York.

In reporting on the organization's youth program for next year, Maurice Bisgyer, of Washington, executive vice president of Bnai Brith, noted that American Jewish communities had "not yet come to grips with the problem of providing sufficient facilities for an expanding Jewish youth population." He asserted, says the New York Times, that Jewish youth activities that "have any cultural content are cruelly understaffed and undernourished financially." The consequence, he said, "is that we threaten to commit our youth to a spectator mentality in terms of their religious culture."

Mr. Bisgyer noted the "eagerness of the present generation of Jewish teen-agers to identify themselves with Judaism" and he disagreed with the "contentions of some rabbis that community youth programs are becoming substitutes for synagogue participation."

He said that such programs were not in competition with synagogues and that they were "a necessary complement to religious worship in the present character of Jewish life in America. By fostering a sense of Jewish belonging they are basic to the cultural growth of young Jews who live in a free society."

Mr. Bisgyer defended the concept of community youth work that "embraces the totality of Jewish life without emphasizing religious distinctions of the three branches of Judaism: Orthodox, Conservative, and Reform."

Among the Bnai Brith youth programs are the Hillel Foundations on 217 college campuses throughout the U.S. and vocational counseling programs in seventeen major cities. The Hillel Foundations stress Jewish religious and cultural life. The remainder of the budget supports Bnai Brith's education and American and foreign-affairs programs.

Philip M. Klutznick, of Park Forest, Ill., chairman of Bnai Brith International Council, said Bnai Brith would construct a regional headquarters in Tel Aviv, Israel, says the New York Times. Mr. Klutznick said the construction would be financed in part by Israeli members of Bnai Brith and by funds received by Bnai Brith from the sale of its pre-war headquarters building in West Berlin.

The Anti-Defamation League, whose aim is to fight religious and racial discrimination in schools, jobs, and housing, will receive $2,200,000. This group also raises funds from sources outside of Bnai Brith. A new budgetary item for 1960 will be $100,000 for expansion of the adult Jewish education program. A total of $300,000 is expected to be spent for this purpose over the next three years.

The delegates voted also for construction of a regional headquarters in Tel Aviv. The building, the first for this purpose in Israel, will be financed, in part, with funds from the sale to West Berlin of the Bnai Brith pre-World War II German headquarters.

The head of Bnai Brith called on American Jews to "press vigorously" for action by the Soviet authorities to remove what he termed their restrictions upon Jewish religious and cultural activities. Label A. Katz, president of the 116-year-old Jewish service organization, expressed "deep concern" for the survival of Jewish life in the Soviet Union.

His address opened the four-day annual meeting of the organization's board of governors at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. "It is a matter of urgency and responsibility for American Jews to exert positive efforts in behalf of the Soviet Jewish community," he said.

"We make no plea to Premier (Nikita S.) Khrushchev and the Soviet Union's ruling authorities for any special privileges for Russian Jews. What is claimed is that Jews be granted equality in enjoying those rights and that status accorded to other nationality and religious groups within the Soviet Union."

Several weeks ago the White House informed Bnai Brith that President Eisenhower, at his Camp David meeting with Mr. Khrushchev, had inquired about the status of Russian Jews and that the Premier had denied that Soviet Jews were treated differently from other groups, says the New York Times. Mr. Katz maintained that the policy of discrimination was "Government-imposed" and that its effect was "to asphyxiate every possibility for Jewish cultural and religious life in the Soviet Union."

"It is a tragic circumstance of the 'cold war' that Jews of Eastern Europe are forcibly isolated from any cultural contacts with their coreligionists throughout the world," he said. "And it is a miracle of perseverance that Russian Jews are still able to cling to some few sturdy strands of a religious and cultural life after having suffered almost four decades of discrimination in these areas."

Engineer Invented 200 Devices In Many Fields

Dr. Sydney Norton Baruch, an electrical engineer and inventor, died of a heart attack on the street in front of 545 Ninth Avenue, in New York. He was 74 years old. Dr. Baruch lived at 267 West Eighty-ninth Street and had a laboratory at 1476 Broadway.

He was credited with some 200 inventions in many fields. Among them was a depth bomb said to have been successfully used against German submarines in both World Wars, says the New York Times. Others included thermo-relay devices, two types of mercury rectifier tubes and a method of sound recording for motion-picture films.

Dr. Baruch said in 1928, when he demonstrated his motion-picture sound recording device, which he called Moviephone, that he had invented it in World War I when there was need for a mechanism to intercept German wireless messages. He said that his device had made possible the discovery of a German broadcasting station on Long Island, N. Y. during the war.

In 1931 Dr. Baruch announced his discovery of a radio transmission principle that he hoped would revolutionize broadcasting methods and permit more stations to operate simultaneously without interference. Other inventions credited to him included a pneumatic mail tube, a device to prevent the killing of underground miners by lightning, and a machine for treating brain syphilis.

In the Nineteen Twenties he was a director and controller of the United Broadcasting System, composed of 165 small radio stations. He designed, built and operated a number of these stations and was particularly active in station WBNY here, of which he was manager.

Dr. Baruch received an electrical engineering degree from Cooper Union in 1911 and a Ph. D. from the University of California. He was at one time chief engineer for the Federal Telephone Company and the General Petroleum Company of America; president of the Public Service Corporation of California and chief research engineer for the General Arc Lighting Company. Dr. Baruch had operated his laboratory in New York since 1930.

He had been a consulting engineer to the Army Signal Corps and the Army Air Force and was a fellow of the Royal Society of London and a member of the American Institute of Radio Engineers and the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. He was a Mason and a Shriner.

A sister, Mrs. Mildred Davison, of Miami Beach, Florida, survives.

Lehman Heads Reservoir Of Leaders For Synagogue

The Synagogue Council of America announced the formation of a national group of Jewish leaders to "provide a reservoir of statesmen for the American synagogue's growing role in national and international affairs".

The announcement was made in a joint statement by Rabbi Max D. Davidson, president of the Council, and former Senator Herbert H. Lehman, honorary chairman of the newly organized group, says the New York Times. The Synagogue Council is the national coordinating agency of the rabbinic and congregational groups of the three branches of Judaism — Orthodox, Conservative, and Reform.

The new group, to be known as the National Advisory Council, will be headed by Benjamin Lazrus, founder and former chairman of the Benrus Watch Company.

Rabbi Davidson and Mr. Lehman pointed out that the new group would seek the aid of religious leaders in such problems as better understanding of the United Nations, disarmament, the suspension of nuclear bomb-testing, human rights and religious liberty.

The announcement said the decision to establish such a group had developed at a briefing session before the conference of the President's Committee on Government Contracts called by Vice President Richard M. Nixon last May.

The Synagogue Council named a delegation of leaders who drew up plans for an advisory council "in response to the continuing need of the Synagogue Council for qualified lay leadership, both locally and nationally, on a variety of issues."

Mr. Lazrus announced that the following community leaders had agreed to serve on his Council: Alfred R. Bachrach, Stanley R. Broff, Ira Guilden; Orin Lehman, Earl Morse, Max E. Oppenheimer, Maurice Tempelsman, of New York; George Brussel Jr., Elmsford, N. Y.; Charles S. Ralsen, New Rochelle, N. Y.; Philip M. Klutznick, Park Forest, Ill.; Jacob M. Arvey and Nathan Cummings, Chicago; Edward H. Benenson, Stamford, Conn.; Jacob Blaustein and Joseph Meyerhoff, Baltimore. Samuel H. Daroff and Harry S. Sylk, Philadelphia; Irving Fain, Pawtucket, R. I.; Kivie Kaplan, Boston; Abraham B. Polinsky and Benjamin H. Swig, San Francisco; Myron S. Silbert, Cincinnati; Louis E. Wolfson, Jacksonville, says the New York Times. Michael M. Nisselson, of New Rochelle, will be consultant to the Council, and Irving Workoff, director of development.

Re-Thinking The Problem Of Conversion

BY MARGOT LESTER

Whether we like it or not — and there are very few of us who like it — there are a great many Jewish families in South Africa in which there has been intermarriage. Nor can one attach blame; the kind of home in which the child is brought up is no ultimate safeguard against intermarriage. Although some marry only after the most heart-searching conflicts, and others without seeming aware of the many implications of the union between a Jew and a Gentile, neither a tradition-loving Jewish home, a very orthodox upbringing, or a background not observably Jewish is proof against a final decision in favour of such a marriage.

The reasons for the increase of intermarriage would make a fascinating study; is it the attraction of the out-group, that which is totally unlike oneself or one's background? Is it the break-down of what we term "traditional values" in so many homes? Is it that the blindness of love enables the young couple to close their eyes to the reality of their childrens' future by saying, "Oh well, we are citizens of the world — we want none of that tribal stuff."

However, my main concern is not with the reasons for what one must regard as an accepted fact — the enormous increase of intermarriage — but with what the Jewish attitude should be to this undeniable fait accompli. In essence the problem boils down to whether conversion to Judaism should be encouraged or discouraged.

Since Herod's time, and before, would-be converts to Judaism have been discouraged, suspected, and frowned upon. We Jews are not a proseletising race, thus affirming our belief in the omnipresence of God, since we feel that there is no necessity to embrace Judaism which is race and religion, in order to express faith in monotheism. Although there have been various notable exceptions, such as the wholesale conversion of the Khazars of the Crimea in the eighth century, or that of such men as the Catholic Aimé Palliere, who became a great rabbi, the Synagogue most decidedly does not welcome new converts.

The traditional Jewish reaction to converts is reinforced by such considerations as these: that easy conversion encourages intermarriage, that the young lady in question (it is seldom a young man) probably cares very little for Judaism but a great deal for the man she wants to marry, and would probably convert to the Greek Orthodox Church had her fiance been of that faith; that Half-Jews and converted Jews can become the most vitriolic of anti-Semites; that no-one can learn about Judaism in any given time that which a Jew feels in his blood both from his living experience and his ancient, proud, and tortured history. All these objections contain much truth. I should like to discuss them in detail.

Easy conversion may well encourage young Jewish men to intermarry, but the point is that the difficulty of conversion does not discourage them. Once married to a non-Jew, their position in the Jewish community often becomes untenable, and usually they are "lost" to Jewish life, whatever their inner feelings may be. I have coached would-be converts for some years, teaching them Hebrew, Jewish customs, festivals, history, and traditions. Thus the cases I cite are pupils who have passed through my hands.

I have never had a pupil whose husband or fiance has not drawn much closer to Judaism. Though imbued with Jewish feeling, it is not every young man who can answer immediately to the query, "Who was Menasseh ben Israel," or "What is the significance of the festival of Shavuot?" The actual effect of the conversion is to strengthen interest in Judaism on the part of the Jewish relatives or relatives-to-be. One might explain this in terms of Toynbee's famous "challenge and response" theory.

There are many who are unaware of the depth of their Jewish feeling until the challenge of intermarriage in the family forces them to a moral and spiritual reassessment. Since it is my sincere belief that the religous and ethical ideas of Judaism are of the utmost value, I fail to see why such reawakening on the part of Jews, and such interest on the part of the would-be converts should be subject to needless discouragement and suspicion.

Any woman making application to become converted to Judaism can never be aware of the essence of Judaism before she begins to study the subject. The interest is there, usually based on an acquaintance with Jews, and greatly strengthened by the desire to make a unified home, and to bring up children unburdened by the rending conflicts experienced by a half-Jew. In the beginning there may not be more than this interest; for the motives depend so much on the spiritual level of the woman.

Some women are innately drawn to ethical and religious ideas, others have an intense awareness of the presence of God, and of course there are those who cannot reach a profound understanding of Judaism. To each according to his capacity. (I cannot see that this fact will prevent a woman of the last mentioned type from making an excellent Jewish wife and mother.) It has been one of my most rewarding experiences to watch a pupil's fear of the unknown develop into the incredulous surprise which unexpected knowledge brings, (for example, the treatment of the Jews during the Middle Ages, especially at the time of the Crusades) and in turn, grow into the passionate interest in Judaism which one cannot expect her to have in the same way before starting her studies.

But can converts ever become really Jewish? Of course it is difficult to imagine a Jewess with Welsh or English ancestry, one with a bishop for an uncle, or with a childhood spent in a convent; it is even more difficult to explain anti-Semitism to one who has never experienced or even thought about its blows or innuendoes. Judaism could be studied like any other religion, for example, Hinduism. One might become very learned on the subject — but have no desire to become a Hindu. And feeling of course, can never be taught. But there are other ways.

Almost every pupil has an imaginative sympathy. Many have participated in festivals in Jewish homes; regular attendance at synagogue generates religious feeling; pupils always relate with much interest stimulating discussions they have had with Jewish friends. Stimulating Jewish acquaintances, and books are the two main pathways to an understanding of the diversity and unity of Jewish life.

Books of Jewish jokes ("the bitterer gelechter"), tales of the Maccabees, biographies of Jews famous for contributions in any sphere, extracts from the Talmud, readings from the Bible, current Jewish periodicals and journals all help to create new patterns of thought. After all, once a person is converted it is the beginning not the end of the study of Judaism — and this point I always stress.

I think the most genuine stumbling-block to conversion on the part of the pupil (apart from the very strong Christmas celebrations feeling) is the need to reorientate herself in regard to Christian theology. For some pupils this difficulty does not exist, but where it is felt, it cannot be dealt with only on rational grounds, and in matters of all faith the greatest of respect is called for. Usually the pupil is strangely unaware of Jesus' Jewish background.

Yet when a thorough knowledge of the teachings of the prophets has been gained, for example, Hosea's contribution to the greater understanding of God's love, and when the wise words of great rabbis such as Hillel have been absorbed, the nature of Jesus' great teaching is seen in its historical

Israel Makes Progress In Immigrant Centers

Progress in the development of industry in new Israel immigrant centers has been reported from Beit She'an in the north and from Kiryat Gat and Dimona in the south, The Israel Digest reports.

A new plant for the drying and packing of dates, the only one of its kind in Israel, was recently dedicated at the immigrant town of Beit She'an. The factory will not only dry and pack dates, but will also pack vegetables for export during the winter and grapes and raisins for export during the summer.

Pinhas Sapir, Minister of Commerce and Industry, who spoke at the ceremony, pointed out that the Government has helped in the creation of 120 industrial plants and workshops in agricultural settlements, and promised Government aid to all constructive enterprises in agricultural areas.

Mr. Sapir, while speaking at a meeting of the Beit She'an Labor Council, announced that work will begin on the construction of new textile plants which will, in the first stage of their development, employ 350 workers. He also said that a diamond polishing center, employing 150 workers, would be set up in the immigrant town.

Industrial plants now nearing completion in Kiryat Gat will employ about 700 regular workers when they are in full operation. Kiryat Gat is being developed as an important textile center. Besides the two cotton gins and the spinning mill, there are now three weaving plants.

perspective. The significance of the Jewish meaning of monotheism must be discussed.

I would greatly condemn a wanton destruction of any faith; all I can attempt to do is to put the Jewish viewpoint forward, and let the pupil draw the conclusion which best satisfies her own conscience. The accord between Jewish and Christian ethical ideas facilitates all such discussions.

It is a truism to repeat that many of the most notorious Jew-haters had some of the despised blood running in their veins. This is a danger which cannot be minimised. If most Jews have felt at some time in their lives a certain self-hatred and a desire to negate their Jewishness, how much greater might not the conflict be in one who is both Jew and non-Jew. A child whose mother is converted to Judaism and who has an affirmative Jewish upbringing has an excellent chance of adjustment as a Jew in the world; a child in whose home there is the tension of two religions, or the laissez-faire of "Oh, we will let him decide on his religion when he is old enough" can so easily become neurotic, or anti-Semitic, or the occasion of a complete division of sympathies within a family unit.

Why should we not welcome would-be converts (some of them already married for years) who long to have their children become Jewish, and who are frustrated and embittered by the constant rebuffs of a suspicious community? Every intermarriage might mean a loss of his Jewishness to the person involved — one cannot feel very happy about it. However, the encouraging of conversion seems to be the only constructive approach once such a marriage has been determined upon.

Centuries of persecution have made us suspicious and justifiably so of the non-Jew, and all the horrors perpetrated in the name of Christianity have unfortunately made that very name anathema to many Jews. The reluctance to accept converts is understandable, but a realistic re-evaluation of these attitudes, and a constructive attempt to deal with the frequent phenomenon of intermarriage must be made.

Bar Ilan U. Students Open Free High School

A free high school education was offered to the residents of the Kfar Uno Maabara by the students of Bar-Ilan University, American-patterned university of Israel at Ramat Gan, a suburb of Tel Aviv. Meyer Wilchick, young president of the Bar-Ilan student organization, aged twenty-four years, is a fourth year chemistry major at Bar-Ilan. The school, the first of its kind in Israel, will be made possible by Bar-Ilan students teaching the Maabara residents without any payment.

Each student, recognized by the Ministry of Education of Israel as a qualified high school teacher, has volunteered to teach a minimum of two hours per week. All courses normally studied in the Israel High School System will be offered at the new school. Although the school will be religious in philosophy it will be open to all who meet the minimum of educational requirements. Bar-Ilan University, a liberal arts college with a faculty of more than 100 and a student body numering some 450, offers 200 courses in the faculties of Judaica, natural sciences, and mathematics, social science, languages, and literatures. In the student body of this co-educational institution are about twenty-five Americans. The University is sponsored and maintained by the American Committee for Bar-Ilan University, 527 Madison Avenue, New York 22.

A balanced diet consists of the foods that supply the proteins, minerals and vitamins necessary to health. Canada's Food Rules provide the basis information for planning a balanced diet. Copies are available from local or provincial health departments.

The premises, tableware, equipment and facilities of public eating places can affect the health of the public if they are not kept scrupulously clean. Disease germs may spread by unclean utensils, flies, vermin or unclean hands of the restaurant workers.

The Jewish State And The Jewish People In Interchange Suggest A "Golden Age"

BY PROFESSOR SALO W. BARON, OF COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY IN THE CONGRESS BI-WEEKLY

Our entire historic experience bears out the assumption that both the State of Israel and the Jewish dispersion are here to stay. For any foreseeable future we have to reckon with the continuation of the perennial dialogue between a far-flung Diaspora and an ever-growing Jewish home country. This is not to deny the incontrovertible historic fact that Jew-baiting has put an end to many Jewish settlements, including some of the great centers of Jewish life. Hence many observers were led to the conclusion that anti-Semitism must put an end to Jewish life everywhere, sooner or later.

Of course, no careful student of history would venture to predict that a repetition of the Nazi experience would be impossible anywhere else. But for that very reason he would also be wary of predicting that such a repetition must necessarily occur. Certainly, wherever the democratic ideal is dominant the recognition that any violent onslaught on Jews is but a preliminary phase of an attack on the very democratic foundations of society has been gaining ground and has helped marshal all progressive forces on the side of equality.

Democracy, to be sure, has created another danger to Jewish survival and has erected the specter of total assimilation. No longer do Jews have to give up their faith in order to be wholly integrated into the majority nations. Hence their complete loss of identity has become a real possibility. However, the record of the entire Jewish experience under both Christendom and Islam indicates that, while individual Jews still can more or less easily disappear, a mass of Jewry could not obliterate its existence even if it took the fatal step of conversion to the dominant faiths. In reality, the vast majority of Jews, young and old, wish to preserve their identity forever and are trying in the best way they know to instill in their children a pride in their millenial heritage.

I realize, of course, that I am thus speaking against what has long been in certain circles a widespread belief, namely, the "negation of the Galut." I have long been convinced that the doctrine of the speedy disappearance of the Jewish dispersion as a result of anti-Semitic attacks not only fails to carry conviction with the majority of younger Jews today, but that it has largely lost even its propagandistic value.

The few who might take such a threat seriously would consider its imminence far less immediate than, for example, the danger of hydrogen bombs falling upon their cities. We have yet to hear of any mass movement of threatened populations out of the great metropolitan areas and industrial centers to remote rural districts where they would be relatively safe from falling bombs and spreading radiation. The specter of annihilation ought, therefore, now to be replaced by the genuine appeal exercised upon all thinking Jews by the growingly satisfying, beautiful life in Israel resurrected.

Under these circumstances the unity and cooperation of the Jewish people in Israel and elsewhere are the most urgent postulate of our age. Lack of such cooperation had engendered tragic consequences for both the Jewish State and the dispersion during the Second Commonwealth, an experience which must not be repeated today. It is generally agreed that around that Commonwealth were grouped large, affluent, and sometimes culturally creative Jewish communities from Iran to Italy and beyond. Unfortunately, however, that Diaspora took little part in shaping the destinies of the mother country.

Under Roman domination, especially, there was the marked contrast between the imperial policy favoring Jews outside of Palestine and severely oppressing them in their home country. A constant exchange of ideas and coordination of efforts among the Jews of all lands might have prevented those great tragedies which led to the destruction of the home country and the permanent weakening of the Jewish communities in the other Roman provinces. Once again, such close cooperation and coordination are needed even in the political sphere, and still more so in the areas of economic reconstruction and cultural creativity.

To be sure, such close cooperation may cause some questioning on the part of Jew-baiters and extreme nationalists everywhere. On its face it may not be easily acceptable even to some Jews themselves. The prevailing mood of the younger generation today, whether in Israel or the dispersion, is a striving toward "normalcy." In Israel, normalcy means primarily living like most other nations; elsewhere, it is an attempt to live like other individuals in the same country. Yet, whether or not one believes in the "chosenness" of the Jewish people, the fact remains that like the history of every great people, only more so, that of the Jewish people has many unique features which set it aside from the "usual" national developments.

Certainly the relation between the Diaspora and Israel is unprecedented except in Jewish history alone. There is no other historic experience where dispersed "colonies" had created for themselves a mother country, rather than the other way around. If we were medieval scholastics we might indulge the paradox that the Diaspora is simultaneously Israel's daughter and Israel's mother. As a daughter, it is going to receive much of its spiritual nourishment from that mainspring of Jewish creativity on the soil of its forefathers. As a mother, it has been and will be lavishing of its own bounty and tenderness on its cherished offspring.

As I see the shape of things to come, Israel will continue with its "ingathering of exiles" not only in the physical sense, but also in that of absorbing the fruits of world cultures, partly channelized through the Jewish adjustments to those cultures by the segments of the Jewish people directly exposed to them. At the same time, Israel will help the communities of the dispersion to maintain their historic progression toward ever-richer combinations of human and Jewish values. In such constant interchange Israel and the dispersion are likely to open up a new "golden age" of Jewish culture, more "golden" than those ever achieved by the Hellenistic or Spanish Jews.

A.J.C. President Talks About Russia, And Germany

Dr. Joachim Prinz, national president of the American Jewish Congress, called on Soviet Deputy Premier Frol R. Zozlov to permit the Jewish community of the U.S.S.R. to resume contacts and associations with Jews in the United States and other parts of the world. Commenting on the Russian official's appeal for a return to the Soviet-American "comradeship" of World War II, the American Jewish Congress leader challenged Mr. Kozlov to restore facilities essential to preserving cultural and religious life among Russia's 3,000,000 Jews. Among such essential facilities, Dr. Prinz said, is the right to maintain normal relations and contact with organized Jewish religious and communal groups in other lands.

Dr. Prinz spoke at a press conference in Stephen Wise Congress House, 15 East 84th Street, New York, prior to his departure for Europe heading a 65-man U.S. delegation to the recent sessions of the World Jewish Congress in Stockholm, Sweden, at which Jewish communities in some fifty countries were represented. Although Russian Jews were invited to participate in the World Jewish Congress meeting, he said, no reply had then been received from Moscow. He cited an editorial in the Soviet daily Izvestia indicating that permission would not be granted for Russian Jewish communities to take part in the Stockholm meeting. Dr. Prinz said word was still being awaited from the Jewish communities of Poland, Rumania, Bulgaria, and Czechoslovakia, which also received special invitations.

During his trip abroad, Dr. Prinz visited Germany, where he confered with President Theodor Heuss on combatting renewed outbreaks of anti-Semitism in that country. A former rabbi of Berlin, Dr. Prinz was expelled by the Nazis for anti-Hitler activity. He preached to his old congregation in Berlin recently.

In his talk with newsmen in New York, the American Jewish Congress leader spoke of alarming reports" from Russia indicating an official campaign to "seal the doom of Jewish cultural life in the U.S.S.R." He noted as an example that not a single Yiddish author was heard at the recent Congress of Soviet Writers, the first time Yiddish writers have been excluded in this way from Soviet literary circles.

Dr. Prinz also reported that "no action had been taken by the Russian government to permit the resumption of a vital Jewish cultural and religious life in the U.S.S.R. despite the assurances of friendship and similar sentiments expressed by Soviet Deputy Premier Anastas Mikoyan during his visit to the United States last January." Pointing out that other minority religious and ethnic groups in Russia had been granted many rights and facilities denied to Jews, Dr. Prinz said that the survival of Jewish life in Russia depended on the restoration of essential cultural and religious facilities that had been withdrawn shortly after the end of World War II.

"If Mr. Kozlov really wishes to translate into action his stated desire to develop friendship between the people of the U.S.S.R. and the people of the United States," Dr. Prinz declared, "we urge him to permit Russian Jewry, as individuals and as communities, to enter into contact with the largest Jewish community in the world, the Jews of the U.S. Freedom to maintain and develop such contacts would both demonstrate the sincerity of Soviet friendliness moral reparation and indemnification, coupled with a massive effort to teach the younger generation of Germany the facts concerning the evils of Nazism, can instill the confidence of the nations of the world in a new, democratic Germany," Dr. Prinz declared. "Only a democratic Germany, based upon respect for the dignity of man and equality of rights for all, can alleviate the fears of those who remember the past so vividly and who are not encouraged by the new and frightening manifestations of nationalism coming out of Germany today."

The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only Jewish publication in Canada printed in any language reaching the Jewish community which is not sponsored by a group or an organization and which is able to claim membership in the Audit Bureau of Circulations.
